Conference paper by Zied Ben Amor

Being a founder of an independent union for university teachers and an active member in an NGO dealing with education reformat, but also a blogger and a digital activist in fields of human rights, liberties and freedom of speech, I believe that my participation in Committee III: »What are the legal requirements and protection NGOs and employee representative bodies/trade unions need in order to participate in political decision-making? How can implementation of new/reformed laws enable them to participate in political decision-making?« will be very enriching.

I am looking forward to share my experience with others and learn from the feedback of the different participants.

This conference matters to me as a university scholar and researcher, a digital and social media activist and blogger, a co-founder and a vice-president of a trade union for university teachers and as an active member involved in the process of education reform and decision-making.
