

The right choices for cooperation

Conference paper by Khaled Fourati

Entrepreneurs and civil society are important actors in the stabilization of the political and social life of the country, especially for emerging countries. Their role lies in influencing political parties and governments in the establishment of equitable laws and rules, which will encourage the emergence of a form of citizens' intelligence to sustainable development.

This has been proven in the case of Tunisia, where civil society, women and the business community have been crucial.

Entrepreneurs and civil corporations may have converging goals. The evolution of education and mentality, private initiative, the social market economy, welfare, the emergence of an intellectual elite, inevitably lead to sustainable development.

The coordinating countries will detect civil corporations capable of presenting serious and relevant programmes in their respective areas. The choice of partner and programmes remain the most important elements. The selection of persons should be done on the basis of their reliability, honesty, reliability and competence.

However, it is bad for society if the choice of partners is not appropriate or is not carried out on a good foundation. Monitoring and funded programmes should not pursue personal goals. The collective and national interest should be more important than the individual interest.

Supported by

Friedrich Naumann STIFTUNG FÜR DIE FREIHEIT

